PARENT VOLUNTEER BREAKFAST

Invigorated, optimistic about CHIJ's parents' involvement activities—they are definitely more than what I had as an IJ student. I fully agreed that our daughters do feel happiness and pride when they see their parents in school, so I'm glad that was acknowledged. It's also a good thing that the calendar had a balance of Christ-centric and secular activities.

The mood at the breakfast was very welcoming. I told my husband that connecting with the other parents (who aren't necessarily IJ alumni) was the best part about it—we all want to make CHIJ a wonderful experience for our girls. There was a great mixture of veteran and new IJ parents in the CPC, but all equally enthusiastic and passionate about the role of parent volunteers. They gave off the vibe that there is no help too small.

All in all, I can't wait to start giving back to IJ in this way! Thanks for the opportunity!
